

Discounting multilingualism, or considering it an obstacle, means we neglect a rich thread of human existence. Multilingual clients are different from monolingual clients.

The multilingual therapeutic frame can become part of our core practice. If you feel, as I do, that the time has come for the inclusion of the multilingual experience in psychological therapies then, just as Joshua Fishman encourages us to pass on languages to the next generations, pass what you have learned on. It is a gift.